

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

A vigorous area of low pressure will become slow-moving close to the Northern Isles. The main band of heavy rain associated with its frontal system will continue to drift slowly southwards across the northern half of Scotland through the rest of today. Although drier conditions have now reached northeast Scotland, further showers or bands of more persistent and locally heavy rain may move around the low pressure and affect the areas which have already experienced very large rainfall totals.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 11:20 on Mon, 11th Aug 2014 until 23:55 on Mon, 11th Aug 2014

Further heavy rain will affect northern Scotland today. The more persistent heavy rain will be affecting parts of Highland along with Skye and the Outer Hebrides. Meanwhile the worst of the rain is clearing from northeast Scotland, but heavy showers are likely here for the rest of today.

The rain will also be accompanied by unseasonably strong winds in places with gusts of 50-60 mph.

The public should be aware of the potential for further localised flooding and disruption, particularly to travel given that the heavy rain will be accompanied by very windy conditions.

This is a further update to the warning to include the Outer Isles of Scotland and Skye and to remove it from southern Scotland.
